Many people dream about getting paid to play with toys. For Gary McIntire, it is not a dream. Gary is the Master Lego Builder at the Legoland theme park in Carlsbad, California.

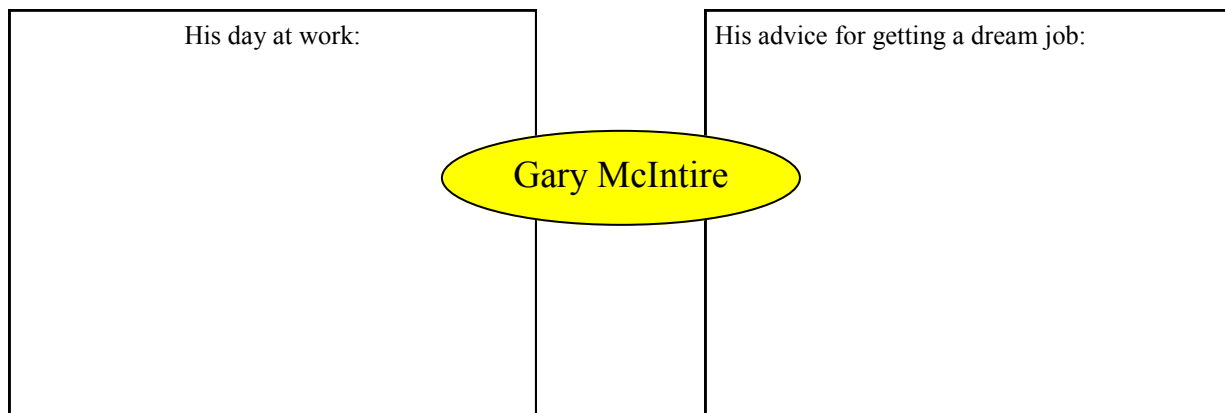

Working with Legos is fun, but it is still a job. Every morning Gary rides around the park on a bicycle. He checks on the models that may be damaged by guests or animals. He makes repairs when needed.

In the afternoon Gary goes to the Model Shop to work. He uses his own ideas or works on an assignment like making a pirate. He researches his design on the internet. Next he sketches the design or uses a computer program called the Legoizer. After that he begins to build and glue the final model.

Would you like to have a dream job like Gary's? Here is some advice from Gary, "Keep having fun and keep trying to be a better builder. Look at what other people build, that is a key."
